Copyright and Licensing at Springer Nature

What is a Creative Commons License?

Creative Commons \(CC\) provides free and easy-to-use copyright licenses giving the public the right to share, use, and even build upon an author's creative work. The non-profit organization CC also protects the people who use an author's work, so they don't have to worry about copyright infringement as long as they abide by the specified conditions. Licensing OA articles under a Creative Commons license has evolved as the standard for Open Access publishing.

The CC BY Attribution

One of the most liberal and accommodating CC licenses for publishing scientific articles is the Creative Commons Attribution v4.0 International licence (CC BY), as it allows the public to adapt and share an author's work, even for commercial use, as long as the author is properly cited. This license lets others distribute, remix, adapt, and build upon your work, even commercially, as long as they credit you for the original creation. This license is recommended for maximum dissemination and use of licensed materials.

Open Access licensing in Springer Nature journals

Open access (OA) articles in Springer Nature journals are published under Creative Commons licences. These provide an industry-standard framework to support easy re-use of open access material.

Our preferred licence is the CC BY license, and all Springer Nature-owned journals with open access options offer the CC BY licence. The CC BY licence is considered the industry 'gold standard' for open access and also preferred by many funders.

For more information on OA licensing, please visit our Journal policies page.

How Springer Nature helps authors ensure compliance to funder requirements

Authors are advised to check their funder's open access requirements, to ensure compliance. Many institutions and research funders worldwide have introduced policies requiring researchers to ensure that their publications are openly accessible. Our FAQ page provides guidance on how authors can meet OA policy requirements of their funders and institutions when publishing their articles.
